A TRAGIC LOVE LEGEND.

At midnight there is often to be seen in the old eastle of Maretsch the spirit of an old lady who wanders about crying and wringing her hands, as though in the most terrible grief. Her long, soft hair is blown wildly about by the wind, her beautiful face is deadly pale, and her eyes are fixed and staring- This is Fraulein you Maretsch, the only daughter of the Baron von Maretsch, and once noted as the most beautiful girl of the whole country. Although scarcely sixteen years of age, she was passionately enamored of the young and brave Baron yon Treueustein, who, under Frederick the Red Beard, together with all the Tyrolian nobility, took part in his crusade for the glory of knighthood, in fighting against the infidels, which, according to the promise of the old Baron von Maretsch, should entitle him to his beautiful daughter for a wife.

Two years had already gone by since the hopeful young warrior had left the country, after having received the blessing of the old baron, when one day s pilgrim from Palestine eraved admission to the castle, and recounted the bloody battles of the Crusaders against the Saracens. In the course of his parrative he came to speak of the young Baron von Treuenstein, and said that he had conquered large districts, and at last had married the daughter of a rich pacha, and made himself hapry for ever. On hearing this, Kunigunde turned deadly pale. and sank swooning to the ground; her attendants carried her senseless to her room for the news of this dreadful infidelity had broken her heart.

Directly the young lady had left the room the pilgrim sprang joyfully up, pressed the old baron to his heart, threw away his pilgrim's garb, and in bright armor appeared before him as the Baron von Treuenstein, who had masked himself in this manner to prove the fidelity of his bride. "Let us now quickly go to my dear Kunigunde," said he to the father, "to dispel the grief and pain which I have caused her," and with high beating hearts they crossed the corridor which led into the young lady 8 room. But the room was empty, and the window open; and as they looked down into the most which surrounded the castle, they saw the unfortunate girl lying crushed and blood-covered in the depth below. The untimely grief had caused her to lose her senses, and in this condition she sprang into the arms of death. At that sight the young baron became speechless. He rushed away to the battle field, and nobody ever heard of him again, while the poor old father died soon afterward of grief; and since that time the spirit of the unhappy girl is condemned to wander about the ruined castle of Maretsch .-Lays and Legends of the Tyrol. By Countess Von Gunther.

GERMAN OCEAN ONCE DRY LAND. - The German Ocean, or North Sea, like the English Channel, was once an inland plain or valley raised far above the sea level. The sea has but recently invaded this depressed plain, submerged its forrests, and superseded its river courses. The buried trees of its sunk forests are still standing, rooted in their own vegetable soil, although beneath the waves. Cromer Forest, which dips into the waters from the coast of Norfolk, is the most famous of the submerged forests of the German Ocean. This ancient woodland has been traced at low tide for more than forty miles. At certain seasons, and especially after great storms, the stumps of oak, alder, yew and Scotch fir are seen standing upright in the water. The condition of the wood and of the fir cones (some of the latter obviously bitten by animals) tells us that the sinking of the land here occurred at no distant period in the physical history of our country. The remains of land animals, too, as well as of the forests they inhabited, are discovered in the bed of the German Geean. In his "Physical Geography of Norfolk," Mr. Woodward tells us that in less than fifteen years the fishermen of the village of Happisburg dredged up from their oyster beds as many as two thousand teeth of mammoths. Bones and tusks of mammoths have also been fished up from these watery depths. It takes us back to the time when the European mainland, instead of ter-minating, as it does to-day, with the coasts of Norway and France, stretched far westward in one unbroken area, beyond the present coast of Ireland. These were the flourishing days of the forests of oak, chestnut, Alder and yew, which are now submerged in the German Ocean and the English Channel. - Leisure

A PARIS FLOWER GIRL.-Everybody, says the London Court Circular, has heard of Isabelle, the flower girl of the Paris Jockey Club, who never sells flowers, but only gives them. Well, then, this "giver" of flowers has made quite a respectable little fortune by giving flowers away. To be sure no one ever thought of receiving her flowers without some little acknowledgment. Thus, for the smallest rose-bud a louis d'or was readily paid. Some, according to circumstances, gave more. The late Emperor is known to have paid for his buttonhole bouquets one hundred francs. Others paid her in jewelry, and at this moment Isa-belle's, the flower girl's jewelry, is more numerdifferent pieces of jewelry given by the highest personages of many nations. And she is no be transacted.

PANY has removed its office to NO. 97 KING STREET, where all its business will hereafter be transacted.

B. WHEAT, President. 'light o'love.'' Isabelle is a portly, middleaged woman, and so plain that she has scarcely known what it was to possess the "devil's beauty"-namely, the beauty attendant on all that is young. Not a spot, therefore, is on her escutcheon. Her fortune and diamonds have been won by smiles, but nothing more. It has been the fashion to give to her, and every one has given. Every member of the Jockey Club makes her a present on his installation and on New Year's Day; also whenever a horse wins the owner remembers Isabelle.
